The National Association of Women Pharmacists (NAWP) is an organisation within the pharmacy profession in the UK that works to proactively address and campaign around gender discrimination and its causes and consequences.

NAWP was founded in 1905 as an organisation within the pharmacy profession in the UK that concerns itself with issues of special relevance to female pharmacists. It has a proud history of supporting women pharmacists.

From 1 January 2020, NAWP became a network of the Pharmacists' Defence Association (PDA). Since then, NAWP has continued to work to empower all women and raise awareness of the discrimination that women still face in the workforce.
